

Somewhere in the Universe

I can imagine you at the edge of the galaxy spinning in the eddies
of hydrogen and helium
at the same moment
that you hear the ringing of the bells of glass again and again
on a distant planet

All of the stars
and the sea shells Legions of ants
The mirage of the desert
The echo in the cave
The breeze on the cliff
The glow of lightning
The sound of thunder
Each thing in its place

I can imagine you contemplating the harmony of the entire universe Listening with amazement your theories Sharing the fantasy of every drop that ventures to the horizon and then vanish
through the window's glass

I can assure you that out there
smells like wet earth
